Centre are from out of town. They want to come, park and head back out on the highways home. They are not interested in any bus rapid transit or restaurants and bars after the event.

Now, the BRT — I spent my entire working career at Saskatoon Transit Service. We know traffic flow through the downtown is nonexistent at best. Our river valley and bridges are beautiful assets to Saskatoon, but they do not make traffic flow through downtown convenient.

No matter how mayor and council, downtown business and millennials spin it, if a referendum was held, as it should be, I would be a no. But at my age I may not see this anyway.

Doug Wilson, Saskatoon

New arena not good use of tax money

The downtown arena and convention centre proposed for Saskatoon is estimated at a cost of $330-$375 million. It's likely that cost will be exceeded in this current environment of ballooning inflation, supply shortages and delivery delays.

Other cities are dealing with a similar situation. The existing arena in Sudbury, Ont. is 61 years old. Their city council proposed an arena/events centre that was originally budgeted at $100 million, but the estimate has expanded to $215 million.

Given the challenges of the past few years (pandemic, supply shortages, supply chain delays, unrest on the global front in the war, inflation and a health-care system in need of resources and support), how wise is it for Saskatoon to spend millions on an arena/convention when there are so many other issues that need attention?

Sudbury's city council voted unanimously to reject the proposed arena project at this time.

The existing SaskTel Centre, built in 1988, and TCU Place, built in 1968 and renovated in 2006, can serve us well for the next decade. Remember, SaskTel Centre has free parking and easy access at the arena for events that garner over 10,000 attendees.

Parking at the future downtown centre will be a headache.

On a proposal that is so costly and one that the public, especially the young, low/middle-income families and the retired, will bear on their taxes — please, use our limited resources wisely and fix the things that need fixing first.
