Comments:

I frequently use the shared pathways by Spadina and 33rd street as a commuting cyclist, and value the connecting 33rd Street pathway very much as a way of ensuring my personal safety, while avoiding problems for traffic; one concern I have in cycling throughout the city is how one must use both pathways and city streets to find one's way. This can be a nuisance for motorists and dangerous for cyclists. Thus, there is high value in connecting the shared pathways between 31st and 33rd street to ensure that cyclists do not interfere with traffic, while maintaining their safety as they make their way through the city.
