Dear Mayor Block and Members of Saskatoon City Council,

I am writing to strongly urge Council to reconsider a commercial-to-residential tax ratio of 1.88:1. There are other, lower options presented to Council that would better reflect a better balance for the businesses that are the backbone of our local economy.

I would also like to respond directly to Councillor Jeffries' comment on the March 26 Council Meeting that he has not heard any concerns from Saskatoon businesses regarding the 1.88:1 ratio. As a business operating in Saskatoon, I want to be clear: we are deeply concerned.

The current environment is extremely challenging for local businesses. We are contending with:

US tariffs that affect our export capacity and raise the costs of goods
Inflation that has driven up the cost of everything from raw materials to wages
Tight and shrinking profit margins as we try to stay competitive
Ongoing pandemic recovery, which continues to impact staffing, supply chains, and demand
Rising crime, including theft and vandalism, that adds to our operating costs
A shrinking labour pool, with both skilled and unskilled workers in short supply
And limited connectivity and business opportunity compared to larger Western Canadian cities with better infrastructure and amenities

We don't have the same advantages as Calgary, Edmonton, Winnipeg, or Vancouver in terms of market access, population size, international airport traffic, or amenities that attract and retain talent. What we can offer is a tax environment that signals to businesses that we are welcome here, that Saskatoon wants us to succeed.

I urge you to reconsider the 1.88:1 tax ratio and listen to the many business voices across this city who are speaking up—right now—with real concerns.
